The Treasure Within One's Reading Process

Reading is its own kind of treasure: a journey, a discovery, and a reflection of ourselves.

In this project, you will experiment with reading in different environments and conditions (from silent reading in nature to reading with music) while keeping a reflective journal. Along the way, we will explore how setting, mood, annotations and mindset change the way we experience books.

Students will share their impressions in group discussions, create personal mind maps and respond to tailored study questions based on their chosen books.

Together, we will explore not just the stories in our books, but the treasures we uncover in our own reading process.

Requirements

- 1-2 English books in your preferred format
- headphones & writing utensils

The project will be conducted in English.
